Exploring Greenwich Village and the West Village gives visitors to New York City a taste of the "real life" of the big city, although the main attractions of this neighborhood can be quite commercial, getting lost in the quiet streets is a wonderful way to spend an afternoon (or a whole day!). Greenwich Village is easily accessible via the A/C/E and B/D/F/V lines from the subway to West 4th and train 1 to Christopher Street/Sheridan Square or Houston Street. Thank you for letting us know! A map caption shows colors, shapes, and symbols to define a certain feature of the map. On a physical location map, you may find areas of lakes, rivers, and mountain ranges highlighted in the map caption by the type of map you are using. On a political map, you will find areas of influence belonging to an individual political party or political party. A map caption will show colors and shapes for political influences, such as parties, that are dominant in a particular state or region. Using a Map Legend Map legends are often found at the top or bottom of a map, with a color or symbol and a description of what these colors and symbols mean. Check the area of the map and then consult the map key for a clearer definition of the part of the map you are viewing. The map legend is also intended to show the relationships between certain things. You can be in a major metropolitan area and consult the metro map, as an alternative to taking a bus or a car. The map and its caption can highlight not only the distance, but also the complexity or ease of your journey using the public metro. This value for highlighting spatial relationships is a key asset for a printed map legend. Types of Map Legends There are many different types of maps, so the map legend varies according to the purpose of the map. In maps of physical geographical areas, shapes and symbols probably show the location of towns and cities, rivers and lakes, government buildings, county borders and roads. In more specialized, specialized maps, the legend of the map will differ. For example, on a map of a large building or complex, doors, windows, departures, stairs, fences, borders of properties and more will be highlighted in the legend of the map. Types of maps printed from the dawn of man, Mapmakers and cartographers have created maps for travelers orientation. The early maps began first on tablets made of clay, and then on parchment paper and finally to printed maps and atlases of books. Today, there are many types of maps and their corresponding legends. You can find Common Foldable Printed Route Maps and Large Highway Maps on the Atlas Linked Form. If you are a meteorologist, you will consult meteorological maps and climate maps. There are reference maps, political maps, population maps, GA © Nero maps and more. The benefits of printed maps Printed maps have lost the general use during the last 20 years, due to the increase of gps assisted by satellite on mobile devices. Having a voice directs it in its automobile through your mobile device is an innovation that few of us could live without today. However, printed maps and their legends can often guide us in our ways that small screens can not. For example, looking at a bigger map can give travelers an idea of what is in the surrounding area, and not only on the direct route to the location. If you are holding a hiking map, you can measure the distance between your start and your Turnado loop using a printed map. Photo of courtesy of the photo: Google Maps with satgins and aircraft that we photographed from above, and with cars equipped with camera. Photos of almost all roads in the world. Google seems determined to record all aspects of our lives. And then publish those detailed images online. Anyone with Internet access can now see some of the most mysterious objects, fascinating and strangest people in the world. Check out this amazing selection of unusual images captured on Google Earth. Google Maps and Google Street View. Clearly, these divers were never that water is an integral part of the diving experience. Thanks to their photo taken by Google Maps in Bergen, Norway, these two boys have earned acclaim for sitting on the side of the road decked out in snorkel gear. Photo courtesy: Google Maps The two jokers are Bergen residents Borre Erstad and Paul Age Olsen. After being told that the Google Maps car was coming, the two men disguised themselves and waited. Photos of the silly snorkelers went viral, with the duo doing several poses, reading magazines and playing on the road with pitchforks. These playful pandas aren't in a park. These images come from the Chengdu Research Base of Giant Panda Breeding, an installation designed to awaken the passion of the panda. These adorable images were captured on Google Maps when he collected photos of Sichuan, China, and show pandas looking cheerful and playful. Photo courtesy: Google Maps Clearly the efforts of downtown Chengdu to increase the panda population are working. The facility opened in 1987 with six pandas rescued, but had facilitated 124 pandas deliveries in 2008. The center is also a popular tourist destination where visitors can see the cute creatures at their most romantic. Perhaps the person who wrote "AHOLE" with an arrow had never heard of the saying "Good fences make good neighbors". The owner of this land in Sequim, Washington, and his neighbors seem to have unresolved problems. Photo courtesy of Google Earth The mown message was created when Blaine and Cindy Zechenely decided to paint their garage and an adjoining apartment purple. Neighbors saw red and insisted that the purple property was a monstrosity, even signing a petition asking for their property taxes to be reduced. While the angry neighbor clearly did not have fun with the color selection. Users of Earth got a kick out of the dispute. This giant atom may look like some kind of futuristic structure, but it's actually the Atomium, a monument in Brussels, Belgium, built in 1958 for the Brussels World Exhibition Brussels the progress of science. The atom was the symbol chosen to represent scientific achievements. Photo courtesy of Google Earth The building was not supposed to remain standing after the World Expo, but it remained because of its popularity. It is built of stainless steel and measures 335 feet high. The pipes connect the five spheres of the building. The Atomium is now a museum filled with exhibition halls, public spaces and a restaurant. It looks like a building that should be in Nazi Germany, but it's actually part of the U.S. Naval Amphibious Base in Coronado, California. Known as the Amphibious Base 320-325 Navy Complex, the original concept of the building in 1967 was very simple and did not take the form of a swastika until modifications were made to the design. Photo courtesy: Google Earth The building's original architect said he simply thought of the complex as four L-shaped buildings. Although the Navy announced plans to spend $600,000 to modify the building in 2007, the swastika design still appears on Google Earth. In 2009, a fish harvest circle appeared in Oxfordshire, England. Someone had transformed a barley field into a 600-foot circle of jellyfish. Karen Alexander, a crop circle expert, told The Telegraph that it was the first jellyfish crop circle she knew of and that it was three times larger than traditional versions of these phenomena. Photo courtesy of Google Earth In addition to creating a unique work of art, some crop experts theorized that the giant jellyfish was created to predict a solar storm and that its tentacles and body parts represented the Earth's magnetosphere. Other crop circle analysts claimed that it symbolized human energy fields known as chakras. Located in Oxfordshire, England, the Uffington White Horse is a mystery. The figure of a prehistoric hill of 3,000 From antique dates from the Bronze Age, it measures 374 feet long and was created from deep trenches full of crushed white chalk. Filling the design with chalk, or "re-chalking," has been a local tradition for hundreds of years. años años Photo courtesy of Google Earth The Uffington White Horse is one of the favorites among the fans of the paranormal, noting the unusually high number of circles on the crops that are near the image. Whatever it is that this abstract equine actually represents, the fluidity and movement of its design are undeniably beautiful. In Shikoku, Japan, the town of Miyoshi has had a decrease in the population. Its remote location makes it an unattractive option for the youngest in the workforce, and the inhabitants of the city are dying slowly. Seeing that the area where she lived was almost deserted, Ayano Tsukimi decided to honor the dead of her town. Photo courtesy: Google Maps In 2014, Tsukimi had created 350 natural sites, each representing a village who had died. While the women are in several shops, houses and town schools, Tsukimi has placed many near the road to encourage visitors to pay tribute to the deceased. It looks like the crazy duo Wayne's World decided to take a walk down the street. Far from their homes in Aurora, Illinois, the two were seen in Plymouth, England. Google Street View captured them wearing their iconic salmonettes from the 1980s and carrying drum sticks and a guitar. Photo courtesy: Google Maps The fictional friends were beloved characters from a recurring Saturday Night Live sketch that became a hugely popular 1992 movie. So, were the two characters of Dana Carvey and Mike Myers really in England? Like Wayne and Garth. "No way! "WAY!" Google Earth has captured captivating images of the giant of Cerne Abbas. Located on the From Cerne Abbas, near Dorset, England, the fearsome naked giant is 185 feet long and runs a great club. The white chalk image stands out against the lush surrounding vegetation. Photo courtesy: Google Earth The age of the giant Cerne Abbas is unknown. Some historians believe it represents an ancient Deity Saxon or Hercules, while other scholars believe it could be a symbol of fertility. The figure is a scheduled monument overseen by the national trust of England and is also a popular British attraction. Anyone who reviews the images of the island of disappointment of Antarctica is sure to be deceived. What appears to be an island when viewed from above on Google Earth is actually the top of an active volcano. For many years, the "island" was used for the commercial whale and also served as a research station. Photo courtesy: Google Earth's business and research activities came to a halt when it was decided that working on an active volcano was too risky. During the 1960s, the volcano erupted twice in two years, demolishing buildings and leaving everything under piles of ash. Today, the Island of Disappointment is a popular tourist attraction. If you're reading this in jail and you're contemplating an escape, don't plan your escape when a Google Maps car is driving down the street. It seems that's what may have been picked up by Google's cameras while filming in Gauteng, South Africa. Photo courtesy: Google Maps This photo was taken in 2010 and shows a man in an orange jumpsuit running down a deserted road with a large, empty field on one side and next to the distance. While the man has never identified himself, it certainly seems that this guy is in the Lam. Many of the Google Street View fans were left scratching their heads after seeing this picture of a woman for a penny with big wheels, riding down the street with a stuffed animal with a penguin. But the locals of Cottlesloe, Australia, were able to clear up the confusion. Photo courtesy: Google Maps by fonts, fonts. The cyclist is the cyclist's champion, Nicky Armstrong. Armstrong pulls her toy penguin, named "Peng", behind her to help stabilize her bike. Towing something also keeps it from spinning if it has to stop suddenly. When he's not with Peng, the award-winning cyclist practices the law. No, this plane didn't crash into the woods. It is an out-of-service Boeing 727 passenger aircraft that has become a home. Although hidden by trees on a 10-acre property, this Hillsboro, Oregon home can be viewed on Google Earth. Photo courtesy of Google Earth The house is owned by Bruce Campbell (sorry, not the famous Evil Dead actor), who bought the plane for $100,000 in 1999. Campbell is a member of the Aircraft Fleet Recycling Association, which seeks to reuse old aircraft into homes or other unusual work or recreation spaces. With its unusual design, Campbell calls it a "big toy." Google Earth fans are amazed by the beauty of the Badlands Guardian. Located in Alberta, Canada, the image appears to be that of an indigenous woman carved in profile. But the stone figure is actually the result of the erosion of water and wind. When viewed from above, the Badlands Guardian looks convex but is actually concave. Photo courtesy of Google Earth Lynn Hickox discovered the feature on Google Earth in 2005. The Badlands Guardian has been dubbed a "geological wonder" and was ranked by Time magazine as one of the top 10 images on Google Earth. If you like pineapple, you will surely enjoy the labyrinth of Dole Plantation. Google Earth captured some sweet images of the pineapple plantation, which is also a popular tourist attraction in Wahiawa, Hawaii. According to Dole, the incredible maze stretches over three acres. Photo courtesy: Google Maps The spectacular site features 2.5 miles of trails created from 14,000 Hawaiian plants. The serpents "exuberant landscaping overlooking the heart-shaped pond at the front", along with a lake at the back, law suite and gazebo. The heart-shaped pond is a popular image on social media during Valentine's Day. John Travolta is a famous actor, but he is also an avid fan of aviation. Google Earth saw two of their planes sitting outside their Florida estate near Ocala. The large property has its own private runway and taxiway, with two buildings adjacent to the house designed to cover the planes. Photo courtesy of Google Earth In 2007, Travolta was included in Living Legends of Aviation, an association that recognizes flying achievements. Travolta is so passionate about aviation that he wrote a book about flying and also served as a pilot when Oprah Winfrey traveled on a private flight to Australia. Although this icon may look like something from The Lion King, it was created in 1933 to promote the Whipsnade Zoo in Bedfordshire. At 483 feet, it is the largest hill design in England. The symbol is so large that it had to be camouflaged during World War II to prevent German pilots from using it for navigation. Photo courtesy of Google Earth In 1981 the lion looked great adorned with hundreds of light bulbs to celebrate the zoo's 50th anniversary. But after decades of neglect and overgrowth of weeds, the icon received a makeover in 2018 when 800 were used. of chalk in its renewal. Just south of Mexico City in the canals of Xochimilco is the Isla de las Muñecas. The owner of the island placed the terrifying toys in several places there in the 1950s to protect evil spirits. More than 50 years after, lots of cobweb covered that are used by climate and time still hang from trees and buildings. Photo courtesy: Google Maps The mulers were destined to scare away the spirit of a girl who supposedly drowned years before. Isle of Muñecas is now both a tourist attraction and a religious place where some will leave offerings for damaged toys. This photo of Google Maps seems to show a Cambodian high school. Tuol Svay Prey was a school on the outskirts of the capital, Phnom Penh, but the building was taken over by the violent faction politics Cambodia, the Khmer Rouge, and transformed into a detention center for political prisoners. Photo courtesy of Google Maps During the 1970s, the building became called a 6 or 21. "of the 14,000 people who were taken to S-21 as prisoners, it is only known that seven have survived. Today the S-21 is called Genocide Museum Tuol Sleng and serves as a public monument and an educational center to help prevent future atrocities. When people saw this pentagram at Google Earth images, they were not sure what was happening in Kazakhstan. The pentagram is often associated with witchcraft and worship satAnica, leading some teÁtricos of SOVIA was conspiracy to speculate that something nefarious was going on. Photo courtesy of Google Earth turns out that the symbol was more SOVIA © tica that satAnico. The pentagram, 1.200 feet in diameter, was actually the outline of a star-shaped park and a possible camp dating from when KazajstAnin was part of the Union SOVIA © tica. During the SOVIA © tica, the stars were popular symbols used on banners, posters and buildings. Santo perfect parking place! The roof of this building seems to be reserved especially for Batcopter. Although it seems the perfect heliport In yet no one has seen to the Crusader Coated. The famous Superha © gnaws probably that things are pretty safe at Kadena Air Base, an American outpost in Okinawa, Japan. Photo courtesy: Google Earth according to Spokesperson for Kadena Air Base, the symbol was placed on the roof by the 44th Air Force Combatant Squadron, which calls itself the Vampire Bats. Nobody knows who painted the logo on the roof, but it is believed that it has been there since the
