Greene attended St. John Bosco High School, where he was a four-year starter on the football team and earned an invite to play in the All-American Bowl.[2][3] He was rated as a four-star recruit, the number 40 prospect, and the number two interior offensive lineman in his class.[4] Greene committed to play college football for the Georgia Bulldogs over offers from schools such as Alabama, Texas, and Ohio State.[5] As a freshman in 2022, Greene did not play due to lingering injuries and back surgery.[6] In 2023, he earned the Bulldogs starting spot at left tackle and started all 14 games.[7] For his performance on the season, Greene was named to the SEC All-Freshman Team.[8] Greene is the son of former NFL and Super Bowl-winning offensive lineman Earnest Greene Jr.[9][1] ^ a b Morales, Antonio (July 30, 2020). Khalif Barnes, an offensive tackle for the Oakland Raiders (No. 69 in black jersey on right) in a 2012 game against the Miami Dolphins The positioning of the offensive tackles in a formation A tackle is a playing position in American football. Historically, in the one-plateoom system prevalent in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, a tackle played on both offense and defense. In the modern system of specialized units, offensive tackle and defensive tackle are separate positions, and the stand-alone term "tackle" refers to the offensive tackle position only. The offensive tackle (OT, T), sometimes specified as left tackle (LT) or right tackle (RT), is a position on the offensive line that flanks the two guards. Like other offensive linemen, their objective is to block during each offensive play, physically preventing defenders from tackling or disrupting the offensive ball carrier with the intention of advancing the football downfield. A tackle is the strong position on the offensive line. They power their blocks with quick steps and maneuverability. The tackles are mostly in charge of the outside protection. Usually they defend against defensive ends, but they do also have to defend against defensive tackles, especially if the corresponding guard on their side pulls. In the NFL, offensive tackles often measure over 6 ft 4 in (193 cm) and 300 lb (140 kg). Offensive tackles are generally the tallest and heaviest players in football. According to Sports Illustrated football journalist Paul Zimmerman, offensive tackles consistently achieve the highest scores, relative to the other positional groups, on the Wonderlic Test, with an average of 26.[1] The Wonderlic is taken before the draft to assess each player's aptitude for learning and problem solving. The distinction between right and left tackle has become less relevant.[2][3] The right tackle (RT) is typically one of the team's most effective run blockers.[4] Since most running plays are directed towards the strong side (the side with the tight end) of the offensive line, the right tackle often contends with the defending team's best run stoppers. They must be capable of gaining traction in their blocks to impede defenders from tackling the ball carrier or create a hole—an area between offensive lineman that forms immediately after the ball is snapped. This is a result of blocking strategies and techniques, generating enough space for the ball carrier to run between and advance the ball. Ronnie Stanley, a left tackle for the Baltimore Ravens in a 2020 game against the Tennessee Titans The left tackle (LT) is usually the team's best pass blocker.[5] Of the two tackles, the left tackles will often have better footwork and agility than the right tackle in order to counteract the pass rush of defensive ends. When a quarterback throws a forward pass, the quarterback's shoulders are aligned roughly perpendicular to the line of scrimmage, with the non-dominant shoulder closer to downfield. The vast majority of quarterbacks are right-handed, so they turn their backs to defenders coming from the left side, creating a vulnerable "blind side" that the left tackle must protect. (Conversely, teams with left-handed quarterbacks tend to have their better pass blockers at right tackle for the same reason.) A 2006 book by Michael Lewis, The Blind Side: Evolution of a Game, made into a 2009 motion picture, shed light on the workings of the left tackle position. The book and the film's introduction discuss how the annual salary of left tackles in the NFL skyrocketed in the mid-1990s. Premier left tackles are now highly sought after and are often the second highest paid players on a roster after the quarterback, in the 2013 NFL draft three of the first four picks were left tackles, and usually at least one left tackle is picked in the first five positions.[6] Recent examples include Joe Alt (2024, 5th overall pick), Andrew Thomas (2020, 4th overall pick), Brandon Scherff (2015, 5th overall pick), Eric Fisher (2013, 1st overall pick), Luke Joeckel (2013, 2nd overall pick), Lane Johnson (2013, 4th overall pick), Matt Kailil (2012, 4th overall pick), Trent Williams (2010, 4th overall pick), and Jake Long (2008, 1st overall pick). ^ Zimmerman, Paul (1984). The New Thinking Man's Guide to Pro Football. Add Timeline Events Add Photos Kirby Smart and Georgia clinch top-ranked 2024 recruiting class">Georgia offensive lineman Earnest Greene turned heads two years ago as an early enrollee with a ton of potential. Greene battled injury as a true freshman but bounced back in a big way this season by winning a starting job and maintaining it throughout the fall.Greene got the upper hand on veteran lineman Austin Blaske for the starting left tackle role and handled his business for each of Georgia's first 13 games this season. Looking back on his journey to becoming a starting offensive lineman for the Bulldogs, Greene explained that the core traits of every Georgia player has helped him grow and become a better player."I would say definitely maturing and just kind of living off the DNA traits here — connection, toughness, resiliency, composure [has been big]," Greene said. "All that stuff kind of finds a way to pop up in your everyday life. So I've just been living off those four traits in all aspects of my life, so it's been making everything a lot more easier since those days at [St. John] Bosco."Greene was one of the top offensive linemen in the 2022 recruiting cycle and had no shortage of scholarship offers. Greene ultimately chose to leave his home state of California and come to Georgia, explaining last week that he saw Georgia's pipeline that sent offensive linemen to the NFL and concluded it was where he needed to be.Greene was one of Georgia's 18 early enrollees in the 2022 class, and he learned quickly how different playing for an SEC team is compared to his days in high school. Last January, Greene recalled his first rep as a Bulldog was a challenging one: He was lined up across from outside linebacker Nolan Smith.Greene pointed out that it was obvious early on how much bigger, faster and stronger every player on the team was compared to his high school days. Despite the daunting challenge of stepping in as a true freshman offensive lineman, he made an impression on his new position coach early on. "Really when I first got here, the kid was way ahead of his time anyway," Stacy Searles said last January. "I think he's got a serious mindset of wanting to be good. He's a very talented young man that's got tremendous feet. He's also a strong kid that has some punch and power and will compete."Greene ended spring practice on a high note by manning the left tackle position for the Red team at G-Day. While Georgia head coach Kirby Smart made it clear he wanted to reserve judgment on Greene's play until Smart could see the tape, he lauded Greene for his efforts during the spring."Earnest has come a long way. I mean, from getting here and having to lose 25-30 pounds, he did that before spring. And then once he got on the field, because of his conditioning level, he was able to handle the number of reps we gave him," Smart said. "He took almost every rep with the two's and the three's for all of spring. And I just think he's going to be a talented player that's extremely tough and does things the right way. We're very fortunate to have Earnest in the program."Greene shared some insight on that weight loss, explaining that he cut out full-sugar Powerades and sodas and traded his usual night snacks of milk and cookies to strawberry or apple cinnamon nutri-grain bars and almond milk. He explained he was committed to cutting the weight because he knew it was necessary to fulfill his potential, and in short order the pounds started falling off.As promising as the start of Greene's freshman season was, things ultimately did not go as planned. Greene dealt with a hamstring injury that kept him off the field early in the season, and by October he had back surgery that ensured he would not play in a single game in 2022.Greene bounced back from those injuries in a big way by asserting himself as a top option at the left tackle spot vacated by Broderick Jones. Greene manned the position at G-Day as a preview of what was to come, as he was the starter come the season opener and maintained it for the entire season.Greene held his own at left tackle on a Georgia offense that averaged 38.4 points per game and as part of an offensive line that was once again semifinalists for the Joe Moore Award. Greene said his "welcome to life as an SEC starting offensive tackle" moment came this season at Auburn, when he could not hear the snap count thanks to the Jordan-Hare Stadium crowd.When asked about Greene, Smart had plenty of positives to share about the redshirt freshman's play."He's done a really good job," Smart said back on Nov. 7. "He's come into a league that it's really hard to play left tackle in and he's done really well. He's had his snafus. He's had his mistakes. He's had some jumpy moments, but I think the fact he's played through all that and is playing with more and more confidence — we've really challenged him to get into shape to play four quarters full speed and give max effort. He's taken that on and is really working hard at it. He's very conscientious about working his stuff."Looking at his play this season, Greene said he's improved his communication the most and explained how important it is to communicate with the other linemen and echo the calls to everyone up front. Greene later said he's still got a ways to go as a lineman and that his focus moving forward is to improve his game in all aspects.Greene has a bright future ahead and has shown plenty this season to have fans excited for 2024. While an offseason in which he'll work to get better is roughly a week away, Greene made it clear his attention at the moment is set on the Orange Bowl and helping this team add one more win to its collection."We're trying to send the seniors out the right way," Greene said. "Personally speaking as a younger guy, it feels like I can only do right by sending them out right. When I first got here, they were the ones that were helping me and showing me the ropes, so I feel like it's only right for me to send them out the right way." Earnest Greene III, an offensive tackle from the University of Georgia, emerged as a standout performer in his redshirt freshman season. The Bellflower, California native was a four-year starter at St. John Bosco High School, where he developed into one of the nation's top offensive line prospects. Greene's recruitment was notable, with four-star ratings across major scouting services. He participated in the 2022 All-American Bowl and was ranked as high as the #2 interior offensive lineman prospect nationally. His senior year culminated in leading St. John Bosco to the CIF Southern Section Division I semifinals. After redshirting in 2022, Greene seized the starting left tackle role for Georgia in 2023. He started all 14 games, earning First Team Freshman All-American honors from The Athletic and a spot on the SEC All-Freshman Team. Greene was integral to an offensive line that led the SEC and ranked seventh nationally in sacks allowed (0.93 per game), contributing to Georgia's top-five national rankings in total offense, passing efficiency, and scoring. Prototypical size for an offensive tackle, with the length to effectively engage defenders in both run and pass blocking Displays above-average lateral agility, facilitating success in zone blocking schemes and second-level engagements Demonstrates good initial punch and hand placement, often neutralizing defenders at the point of attack Positional versatility, with experience at both tackle and guard, enhancing his value to NFL offensive line units Exhibits a physical play style in the run game, consistently working to finish blocks with the whistle Shows good awareness in pass protection, adeptly handling stunts and twists Strong lower body allows for effective anchoring against power rushers Comes from a Georgia program with a track record of developing NFL-caliber offensive linemen Tends to play with high pad level, bending at the waist rather than the knees, which can compromise leverage Needs improvement in pass set depth, potentially exposing him to speed rushers at the NFL level Hand timing and placement can be inconsistent, occasionally allowing defenders to get into his chest Sometimes overextends when reaching for defenders, leading to balance issues in both run and pass blocking Kick-slide technique requires refinement to better handle elite edge rushers in the NFL Greene projects as a high-ceiling, developmental tackle with day-two draft value. His SEC pedigree and immediate impact at Georgia suggest he can contribute early in a zone-heavy scheme. Expect him to start his NFL career at right tackle with potential to slide to the left side as he refines his technique. His anchor strength and lateral agility translate well to the next level, but he'll need to improve his pad level and pass set depth to handle NFL edge rushers. Greene's floor is that of a solid backup tackle, while his ceiling could be an above-average starter by year three. The best fit would be with a team running a zone-blocking system that can afford him time to develop. Given his physical tools and collegiate production, Greene should hear his name called in the second or third round, depending on team needs and how he tests at the Combine. Mandatory Credit: Mark J. Rebilas-USA TODAY Sports Will Earnest Greene III be the next player up in the Georgia Bulldogs' NFL pipeline at the offensive tackle position? As the 2025 NFL Draft cycle approaches, Greene's scouting report is one of the most compelling on the offensive line. Here's what he has to offer. Earnest Greene III's Draft Profile and Measurements Height: 6'4" Weight: 320 pounds Position: Offensive Tackle School: Georgia Current Year: Redshirt Sophomore Over the past five NFL Drafts, the Bulldogs have had four offensive tackles taken in Round 1: Andrew Thomas and Isaiah Wilson in 2020, Broderick Jones in 2023, and Amarius Mims most recently in the 2024 NFL Draft. As Georgia's football program has risen to prominence under head coach Kirby Smart, so too has its development system on the offensive line. There's no denying Georgia's track record, and that makes Greene a must-watch player in 2024. Greene follows in the footsteps of two other redshirt sophomores, who went from highly touted recruits to first-round prospects. Greene himself was a four-star recruit and a four-year starter at St. John Bosco High School in California, and he started all 14 games at left tackle in 2023. Greene is a different type of player than his predecessors, but many of the intriguing cosmetic factors are there on the surface. Taking a closer look at his game, does Greene deserve to be penciled in as a potential first-round pick? Greene's Scouting Report Strengths At just under 6'4", with 35" arms, has an elite blend of natural leverage and length. Explosive linear mover who flashes high-level accelerative capacity on the attack. Shows off great quickness and urgency out of his stance and can kick to good depth. Has the lateral mobility and burst to redirect inside and wall off inside counters. Has high-end power capacity and knock-back force in his hands, drawing from hips. Can unlock menacing rotational torque on extensions and plow defenders out of lanes. Powerful lower body and length allow Greene to sustain power exertions all through reps. Has the raw strength to seal out edge setters and wall off lanes for ball carriers. Has shown to match rushers with corrective footwork after kicking to landmarks. Possesses the foot speed and quickness to correct his base width against counters. Able to envelop rushers with explosive bursts of lateral correction, then extend through. Has shown to levy successive violent extensions inside the torso and delay rushes. Has the awareness to pick out blitz threats from wide alignments and pick up stunts. Mauler who exudes over-bearing physicality and punnels opponents at contact. Has left and right tackle experience, and could translate well at the guard spot. Weaknesses Despite short-area burst, visibly lacks elite malleability and recovery athleticism. Hands are sometimes too wide out of his kick, exposing Greene's frame to opposing power. At times, throws and swings his hands, rather than loading his elbows and launching. Strike and latch placement can be more consistent to properly combat extensions. Overall, hands are still very imprecise, with inefficient energy channeling. Punches can pull him upright, negating base load and disrupting pad level. Relatively upright nature can inadvertently shorten the corner for speed-rushing threats. Could improve at optimizing natural leverage profile by playing with controlled lean. Sometimes sways too far back on his skates when kicking to get depth versus rushers. Inconsistency in dropping the anchor and aligning his base can leave him imbalanced. Sometimes struggles to vary his footwork technique to flip his hips up the apex track. Doesn't have elite hip flexibility, which can cause slight hitches on sharp transitions. Non-elite hip flexibility sometimes impacts Greene's quickness when sealing off the apex. Has dealt with immobilizing injuries in the past and missed 2022 after back surgery. Current Draft Projection and Summary Entering the 2025 NFL Draft cycle, Greene grades out as an early-to-mid Day 3 prospect. That said, he has an exciting combination of explosiveness, power, strength, mass, and length, and that combination sets the foundation for a potential early-round rise. Greene is only a redshirt sophomore, so he's still fairly early in his career as a starting OT. Thus, there's an expected level of refinement that he still has yet to undergo. There are many operational areas in which Greene is still very inconsistent. In particular, his leverage management, pad level, and hand usage all require considerable development. To that end, he also doesn't have the high-end flexibility to recover and counteract those deficiencies. With his various technical deficiencies and physical profile — where explosiveness and power are strengths and flexibility is a weakness — Greene could eventually move inside to guard. But any conclusion as to his future position is pending growth across his 2024 campaign. Overall, while Greene isn't yet in the mix for an early-round spot as an offensive tackle, he has enough physical upside to warrant monitoring — especially given Georgia's track record of development at the position. If Greene can improve his leverage and hand usage, he has early-round potential as an OT or a guard convert.
